In case the acceptor desires to have the acceptance made payable at a bank located in some other place than his home city, he must arrange with the seller to have such a designation, or authority to make it, incorporated in the body of the acceptance, at the time it is made by the seller. Otherwise, it may not conform to the Negotiable Instruments Law. Special Inducements. The question has been very much discussed as to whether any inducements should be offered to the buyer to give his acceptance. Opinions on this point differ: but it should not be done, because such practice might be abused, and at anv rate, the advantages to the buyer should obviate the necessity of any other inducements. A corporation which has had experience in the use of the trade acceptance system, says: Except where unusual circumstances have existed, we have not found it necessary to offer any special inducement to obtain acceptances from our customers. Such cases have been rare, and the maximum concession has been a few days extra time. In no case have we allowed anv extra discount and it has been rarely requested. This seems to prove that the buyer understands that by accepting, he will be benefited in other ways. It must be borne in mind that a commercial acceptance cannot be renewed. If the acceptor requires...
