Luath Press Ltd. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Between Ourselves, Donald Smith, The six months that Robert Burns spent in Edinburgh, between the Ayrshire years and the short-lived maturity in Dumfries, were an intense time in the life of a poet who became a Scottish hero. Burns is an icon, but he is a flawed one. The great bard was fond of drink, women and over familiar with Edinburgh's underworld. He was often conflicted with crippling self-doubt about his talents and bitter about his place in society. During the short time in Edinburgh, Burns had dealings with the infamous Deacon Brodie; was struck by inspiration and failed by his muse; and, fell in love with two unavailable women and bedded many more than that. While never straying from accepted Burns' history, this remarkable novel imagines the life of Burns' in those months to discover the flesh and blood man behind the legend.

Reviews

A top quality publication along with the font used was intriguing to read. I really could comprehend everything using this written e ebook.
