Bibliogov. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 32 pages. Dimensions: 9.7in. x 7.4in. x 0.1in. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) reimburses states for costs they incur in making disability decisions under the Social Security Disability Insurance and Supplemental Security Income programs. HEW negotiators are responsible for approving plans for almost all indirect costs affecting the disability programs. GAO visited six states which together accounted for about 55 percent of the programs total indirect cost in fiscal year 1978. GAO also looked at the extent of the Social Security Administrations (SSA) participation in the examination of indirect costs. HEW pays more than its appropriate share of the indirect costs and reduction of the costs has not been pursued effectively. Between fiscal years 1974 and 1978, indirect disability program costs increased from 9 million to 19. 5 million annually. In four of the six states, disability programs were overcharged at least 645, 000 for services that did not benefit them. Disability programs in the other two states were also charged indirect costs which exceeded benefits received from state services. HEW negotiators do not adequately analyze the propriety of indirect costs and HEW headquarters has no adequate mechanism to ensure that the regional negotiation procedures are applied effectively and uniformly. SSA officials generally are not knowledgeable of indirect cost principles and do not aid HEW in identifying improper charges. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
