Excerpt: . . . and repulsions which the molecules of the crystals exercise upon one another; while, in the latter, forces external to the crystal are brought to bear upon it, and their action is only modified by the resistance which the molecular spacing of the crystal (i. e. , the repulsions exercised between its molecules) and the relative inclination of its developed faces to the directions of compression may be able to offer. In such a case, therefore, the results of compression may be very unequal and irregular; and the same may be said in instances where contraction instead of compression has troubled a crystal during or after its birth, especially if the latter have occurred at a high temperature, since it may be readily imagined that the unequal thermal conductivity along different directions in the different minerals which frequently surround a rock-forming crystal, would more or...
